Web-based Assessments

How do web-based assessments work?

Web-based assessments generally last two to three hours and consist of computerized tests. Candidates are seated in a quiet location with access to a computer. Once logged in to our system, a detailed explanation of what the candidate is expected to do is delivered and the candidate then proceeds to completing the tests.

At the end of the process, a detailed report is generated which describes a candidate, depicts prominent characteristics, specifies strengths and weaknesses and determines the degree of the candidate's fit to the position and organization as a whole.

Three broad types of web-based tests are available and based on an organization's needs, one or more of the following tests may be administered to candidates:

Web-based assessments allow for the testing and screening of applicants in the client's own premises, saving both time and resources. The computerized system is easy to operate, and many applicants can be tested simultaneously.

An SYNERJA consultant will accompany you throughout all stages of system implementation and usage, including the adaptation of the testing modules to suit specific positions in the organization.

Skill Tests

In a vocational setting, various skills are required in order to successfully fulfill the requirements of a particular professional profile.
